APRIL SHINES THE SPOTLIGHT ON AUTISM SPECTRUM DISORDER

Did you know that Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) affects about one in every 110 children and youth in B.C. and is one of the most prevalent developmental disorders in the world?

That's why it's so important to work in collaboration with families, service providers and community organizations, to build community awareness and continue to focus collective efforts to help support and enrich the lives of those living with ASDs.

Every year in April, the B.C. government, families, service providers, community organizations, and municipalities unite for Autism Awareness Month and World Autism Awareness Day (April 2) to recognize and honour children, youth and their families who are living with autism.

The month kicked off in B.C. with the annual Autism Awareness Walk, hosted by the Canucks Autism Network, which was held April 1st in the Jack Poole Plaza at the Vancouver Convention Centre. Minister of Children and Family Development Mary McNeil was joined by families and community members for the walk and the family-friendly day of activities, food, entertainment and a special lighting of the Olympic cauldron.

On April 2nd, the Province celebrated World Autism Awareness Day by participating in Light It Up Blue, a unique global initiative started by Autism Speaks. Iconic landmarks around the globe (i.e., the Empire State Building, the Sydney Opera House and the CN Tower) lit up blue that day. To honour this important global movement, BC Place lit up blue to demonstrate B.C.'s support of families everywhere who are living with autism.

Many more community events and workshops will be held throughout the month in communities throughout B.C. For example, families in Kamloops and Prince George can attend an innovative workshop called "Technology for your Toolbox - Boardmaker and iPad" - which provides a lesson on apps for iPad and other software applications that facilitate communication and learning for children with ASD and other developmental disabilities.

Quick Facts: * The ministry's autism budget has increased this year by $2.3 million to $44.5 million. This is more than ten times the 2001 budget level of $4.1 million.

* For children under age six, families receive access to funding of up to $22,000 per year to assist with the cost of autism intervention services.

* For children and youth aged six to 18, families receive access to funding of up to $6,000 per year to assist with the cost of out-of-school intervention services, in addition to the $18,300 in per-pupil funding for special education services provided through school boards.

* B.C. is the only province in Canada that has a no-waitlist policy for families to access autism funding once their child or youth has received a confirmed diagnosis of ASD. With autism funding, families are able to choose the type of intervention, based on best practice, that best meets the needs of their child.

* The ministry contracts with ACT-Autism Community Training to provide provincial autism information, support, and training services for families of children and youth with ASD, including the Registry of Autism Service Providers list, which ensures that parents of young children with ASD have access to professionals with the education, training, and experience that qualifies them to implement effective behavioural treatment programs.

* The Province has provided $1 million to support intervention research and collaboration across B.C., and $1.2 million in a national study called Pathways in Autism Spectrum Disorders that examines the core features of autism and effective interventions for children with autism.
